Ideas for the development of creative abilities

Visual activity

From the youngest age, we can give children a pencil, paint. What leaves a mark on the surface impresses them and encourages them to experiment. From the age of 3-4, drawing acquires meaningful features. The child seeks to describe the world around him. With age and gaining experience, his skills improve.

It is good to use different materials for modeling—plasticine, clay, dough, paper mass. Each of them has different textures and properties.

Details can be fixed in different ways — glue, threads, etc. Here the picture is much more conditional than the picture, a generalized form, almost without details. Appliqué classes develop feelings of color, rhythm, symmetry. This is how artistic ability is formed. At the same time, children learn to organize planned work.

Unconventional painting

Preschool children initially acquire the simplest drawing skills with traditional paints, pencils, etc., and as they grow up, they begin to look for new ways to reflect on the world around them. At this time, adults can introduce them to interesting unconventional painting techniques.

Paraffin candles, cotton swabs, toothbrushes, combs, threads and other household items are used. Such activities will help relieve children's fears, find self-confidence, inner harmony. A child with different imaging techniques and methods will have the opportunity to choose.

In a theater act, he can become anyone, become a tree, a doctor, an elephant, a giant, an astronaut, etc. This develops intelligence, the ability to empathize and understand the other, reveals new talents and abilities.

Reading and literary creativity

Books give a flight of fantasy, develop imagination, speech. There are a lot of children's works. They should be selected depending on the age and interests of the child. It is important to introduce the child to different genres —fairy tales, poems, stories. You can role-play scenes from books, find rhymes, write simple rhymes and songs. It develops the creative potential of the child.
