Introduction

In the modern era of globalization, national development is closely linked to the formation of a highly skilled, intellectually advanced generation. The concept of the new Uzbekistan is aimed precisely at this goal, and supporting youth has become a priority of state policy.

The fact that over 60% of Uzbekistan's population is young people opens up enormous demographic opportunities for the country. Proper management of these resources is the key to economic stability, an innovative environment, and a competitive national economy.

Key factors for the success of Uzbek youth in the global marketplace include:

Today, many of our young people are successfully working in the fields of information technology, engineering, design, and service exports.

During the new Uzbekistan, youth was placed at the center of state policy, and this approach yielded significant results in a short period of time. Shaping the younger generation as educated, entrepreneurial, and globally minded contributes to the country's future economic stability and the creation of a competitive market.

In recent years, fundamental changes have occurred in the socio-political, economic, and spiritual life of Uzbekistan. Reforms implemented within the framework of the "New Uzbekistan" concept encompass all spheres of society, and at their core are people, particularly the younger generation.

One of the most important changes today is the priority of human interests, entrepreneurial initiative, and knowledge-based policies. The principles of openness, fairness, and innovation are deeply rooted in public administration, the economy, and education..

Today, Uzbekistan's youth are becoming not only a driving force for national development, but also worthy participants in the global market.

The New Uzbekistan is not just a political slogan, but a development path based on practical innovation, economic opportunity, reliance on science and education, and the principles of celebrating human dignity and value. Crucially, these changes are driven by the activism, aspirations, and new worldview of today's youth.

In conclusion, it should be noted that in modern New Uzbekistan, opportunities created for young people are not only a priority of state policy, but also the basis for the country's development. Large-scale reforms in education, entrepreneurship, innovation, public life, international relations, and at the regional level contribute to the full realization of the potential of future leaders.

The words of our esteemed President Shavkat Mirziyoyev to the youth: "You are the golden generation that will create a new history as the creators of a new Uzbekistan" always give young people strength, energy and great enthusiasm.

If the current generation acts with such a high sense of trust and responsibility, there is no doubt that the future of the New Uzbekistan will be brighter and its possibilities more limitless.
